Cadmus Communications Adds Additional Resources to Serve the Scientific, Technical, and Medical Publishing Market

Lori Barber Joins Cadmus, Enhancing Cadmus' Focus on Society Publishers

Richmond, Virginia (October 24, 2006) -- Cadmus Communications Corporation (NASDAQ/GM:CDMS) today announced the addition of Lori Barber as sales director for Cadmus' Publisher Services Group. Ms. Barber will serve the scholarly and professional publishing communities, representing Cadmus' end-to-end suite of content, editorial, and printing services provided by its United States and India-based operations.

Ms. Barber has 12 years of experience in scholarly publishing, spanning the full range of editorial, production, printing, online publishing, and data conversion processes for journals and books. She was the production editor for The American Journal of Clinical Nutrition, where she oversaw a digital production workflow and print and online publication of the journal. Most recently, she was sales executive with ScholarOne, Inc., and was responsible for selling web-based manuscript submission and peer review systems. Ms. Barber received the 2006 Distinguished Service Award from the Society for Scholarly Publishing in recognition of years of continuous service to the organization's committees and activities.

Ted Winslow, vice-president of business development for Cadmus' STM and Professional market added, "Lori has a wide range of experience in scholarly publishing generally and in society publishing in particular. Cadmus has served society and not for profit publishers for over 125 years and we continue to see these publishers as core to our strategy going forward. With Lori's arrival, we add to the already long list of Cadmus associates who are former society publishers and who now focus on leveraging Cadmus' capabilities to meet the continuing and fast-changing needs of these prestigious publishers. We are excited about the difference that Lori can make for Cadmus and for new and existing Cadmus customers."
