The British Library Expands Electronic Distribution Options with RapidRights™ DRM from Cadmus Communications

Richmond, Virginia (December 6, 2005) — Cadmus Communications Corporation (NASDAQ/NM: CDMS) announced today that the British Library (“the BL”) has selected RapidRights™, a digital rights management (DRM) solution, to provide electronic article reprints (“e-prints”).

The BL will use the RapidRights component of Cadmus’ ArticleWorks™ content on-demand delivery system to deliver secure PDF files to customers who purchase permissions to electronically distribute journal articles to their sales forces or prospects.

“E-prints provision is an important extension to our information services portfolio. The Cadmus partnership enables the BL to further develop its secure PDF document delivery services and meet its customer needs,” said Mat Pflieger, Head of Sales for the British Library.

“The British Library and Cadmus are both among the leaders in the scholarly and professional publisher services market, and we believe this relationship creates a powerful new service that will allow publishers to expand their commercial reprint revenue opportunities,” said Hai Tran, Cadmus’ Executive Vice President of Business Development. “In order to be effective, DRM solutions must be unobtrusive to the user as well as being compatible with today’s high security environments. We are pleased that the British Library, a world leader in content aggregation and delivery, has recognized the simplicity and ease-of-use that RapidRights provides for both content providers and more importantly, content recipients.”
